

As Vice President, Financial Services at H&R Block, John Thompson brings a combined nearly 30 years of experience in entrepreneurship, financial services, and product development. He leads the work of H&R Block's new and existing portfolio of financial services, including refund-related products, credit products, and Spruce.

John has spent much of his career working at the intersection of tax and financial services, including both his work at H&R Block and founding a startup that provided services and support to independent tax preparers.

Prior to H&R Block, John was the Chief Program Officer of the Financial Health Network, a national non-profit organization focused on uniting financial services leaders, employers, policymakers, and innovators to design solutions that equitably advance financial health for all people.

He holds a bachelor's degree in computer science from the University of Kansas.
